Can cats be kept in lockers

Overview

If you have a cat that likes to get into things that they aren't supposed to, they might be safer if they're confined to one room at night. If you limit their freedom, they can stay away from.

If you have a cat that likes to get into things that they aren't supposed to, they might be safer if they're confined to one room at night. If you limit their freedom, they can stay away from.

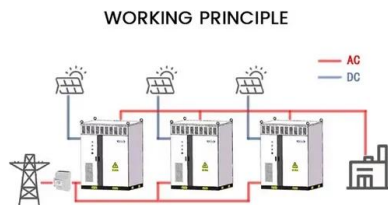

One of the most common concerns about keeping a cat locked in a room is that it can lead to boredom and frustration. Cats are naturally curious and active animals, and being confined to a small space can limit their ability to explore and engage in natural behaviors.

In recent years, there has been a growing trend among cat owners to keep their feline friends confined to a single room in their homes. This practice, known as "cat staying in one room," has sparked a lot of debate and discussion among animal behaviorists, veterinarians, and pet owners alike.

Cats may be confined in mesh, metal or plastic play yards or exercise pens with secure ceilings; Exercise pens allow the cats more space for activity, toys, and a litter box; May be less secure, allowing your cat to escape; Cats may be confined in a cat-proofed room with a sleeping area, scratching area, water station, and litter box.

Yes that can be totally fine! Plenty of people live in studio apartments with a cat (myself included). Just make sure you can provide plenty of enrichment, like lots of playtime, high up places to sit in, windows to look out of, etc
