If your installer says your solar system doesn't come with a warranty, that's a red flag. It's also important to note that not every warranty is the same.

If your installer says your solar system doesn't come with a warranty, that's a red flag. It's also important to note that not every warranty is the same.

Solar panels generally come with two warranties: The product warranty covers the equipment and typically guarantees at least 10-12 years without fail, and the power or performance warranty often guarantees at least 90% production at 10 years and 80% at 25 years.

A solar panel warranty is a guarantee that a solar panel manufacturer or solar panel installer gives a customer, offering protection for panel reliability, production output, and more. Warranties provide financial security for consumers, as they can protect your solar panel system from defects, performance issues, or other concerns.

Understanding solar panel warranties is crucial before making any investment in solar energy for your home. These contracts promise peace of mind, yet knowing exactly what's covered—and what's not—can save you from unexpected surprises down the road.
